Job Title: Reporter, New York Jewish Week
Industry: Internet/Media
Benefits: 403b/Dental/Health
Schedule: Full Time, Monday - Friday, 9:00am - 5:00pm ET
Salary: Range of $45k-$55k

The Jewish Week, now part of 70 Faces Media, is looking for a full-time reporter. Ideal candidates are devotees of Jewish news and New York City, as interested in religion and synagogue life as they are in the city's Jewish arts, culture and food scenes. You'll cover local politics and the opening of a new deli-inspired restaurant, sometimes on the same day.

As a reporter, you will filter out the best stories from a flood of tips, news releases and conversations with city newsmakers. You’ll work the phones, and, when the pandemic eases, hit the streets to bring back original or unexpected stories on people, places and things. You’ll work with teammates from other 70 Faces Media properties, including the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, in spotting trends and shaping the local and national Jewish conversation.

The ideal candidate appreciates the diversity of the New York-area Jewish community and is excited to work a variety of “beats” about the news and life of Jewish New Yorkers and the things that affect them. They’ll present fresh ideas on how to reach a new generation of Jewish readers, and the ideas and products that serve them best.

Responsibilities include:
- Writing and reporting 2-4 stories per week
- Willingness to work across different subject areas—politics, religion, food, and arts & culture
- Report directly to the editor in chief to develop and pitch new story ideas
- Collaborate with the Jewish Week’s editor on our daily newsletter

Desired skills and experience:
- 1-5 years reporting experience
- Strong interest in New York City and its Jewish community
- Ability to multitask and take direction in a fast-paced environment
- Ability to meet deadlines
- Desire to collaborate and brainstorm
- Familiarity with social media best practices
- Ability to shoot photographs and videos a plus
