Job Title: Jewish Life Reporter, JTA
Industry: Internet/Media
Benefits: 403b/Dental/Health
Schedule: Full Time, Monday - Friday
Location: Remote, within the United States
Salary: Range of $50k-$65k depending on experience

The Jewish Telegraphic Agency, the century-old news organization covering the Jewish world, seeks a full-time reporter to report about the frontiers of Jewish life in the United States.

What will Jewish worship look like after the pandemic? How does increasing diversity among American Jews translate into religious communities and practice? What does Jewish identity look like for the increasing number of American Jews who feel connected to Judaism but not to existing institutions or denominational labels? How are the arts and technology creating new avenues for religious innovation and expression?

These are some of the questions you’ll tackle as you tell stories about the people, places, and ideas that drive American Jewish life in the 21st century.

Who are you?
- You believe in the power of journalism to connect, challenge and change communities. You are deeply curious and come out of every conversation with story ideas.
- You have experience reporting and writing news features that engage broad audiences, including, ideally, about trends in religious life.
- You enjoy learning from your editors and colleagues and reflecting on your own growth.
- You have some knowledge about Jewish culture and traditions and care deeply about American Judaism and the people shaping it.

Your responsibilities:
- Write multiple stories per week, from breaking news to enterprise, on a range of topics that you pitch and are assigned.
- Work closely with your editors and colleagues to define the beat, refine your pitches and ideas, and improve your work.
- Collaborate with the team of journalists at JTA and 70 Faces Media to ensure that our overall report is well rounded, engaging and impactful.

This is a full-time union position that reports directly to JTA’s editor in chief. Candidates can be located anywhere in the United States, but being based in a center of a Jewish life is a plus. Some amount of travel is required for success in this role.
